Whitelist Switch

List of positively tested switches including basic data

1.   Summary

A switch is a network device that takes over the control and distribution of data packets, thus enabling the connection of network components and end devices.

The IT market offers a wide range of switches that differ significantly in terms of quality and integrated functions. In order to ensure that the complete functional range of Dallmeier systems can be used, please only use the switches listed in this white paper. These have been extensively tested and reviewed by us.

This document contains the list of positively tested device series.
